Chime Names Six Organizations to Its 2026 Community Changemakers Cohort

November 19, 2026

Partners will receive funding, executive mentorship, and co-created programming to expand financial education and future-ready skills for students nationwide

SAN FRANCISCO--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Nov. 19, 2026-- Chime® (Nasdaq: CHYM) today announced six organizations joining the 2026 cohort of Chime Community Changemakers®, one of its flagship social impact programs that invests directly in organizations advancing financial progress in their communities. Since launching in 2022, the program has supported 28 Changemakers whose work reaches tens of thousands of students, organizations, and educators across all 50 states.

The organizations were selected to join the cohort for their community impact in financial education, wealth building, and AI and the future of work. Each Changemaker receives $25,000 in funding, executive mentorship from Chime leaders, pro bono strategic support, and national storytelling and visibility. The partnerships are tailored to each organization's needs, with clear goals and measurable outcomes to advance their work.

"Helping people build the knowledge, skills, and confidence to get ahead is central to our mission to unlock financial progress," said Jennifer Kuperman, Chief Corporate Affairs Officer at Chime. "Our Changemakers are doing that work every day, helping young people manage their money, build savings, and prepare for a changing workforce. We're excited to partner with these organizations to help them reach more people and expand their impact across the country."

Meet the 2026 Community Changemakers Cohort:

- Council for Economic Education (CEE): A national nonprofit equipping K-12 students with the tools and knowledge of personal finance and economics so that they can make better decisions for themselves, their families, and their communities. CEE's financial education programs reach 3.5 million students and 35,000 teachers annually.
- Next Gen Personal Finance (NGPF): A national nonprofit providing middle and high school teachers with everything they need to teach personal finance well, at no cost: a full curriculum, professional development, as well as implementation support for district leaders. More than 150,000 teachers in all 50 states rely on NGPF curriculum, reaching 5 million students each school year.
- Learn Fresh: A nonprofit using sports and entertainment to make math and STEM engaging for students in underrepresented communities. Learn Fresh has engaged more than 2 million students and 16,000 educators nationwide.
- Knowlej: A learn-to-earn platform that helps schools tackle chronic absenteeism and disengagement by motivating students with personalized rewards for showing up and engaging in learning. As students earn, they build the financial literacy to save and invest wisely, turning every school day into a step toward funding their future.
- AI4ALL: A nonprofit led by AI scientists, business leaders, and educators committed to developing leaders who shape AI for human good. Rooted in responsible AI and inclusion, AI4ALL has helped over 8,000 emerging leaders build the skills to shape AI for the better.
- MyPath: A national leader in youth financial capability, MyPath designs, tests, and scales programs for young people ages 16 to 24 from low-income and BIPOC communities. Participants learn to bank and build savings, credit, and financial confidence as they earn their first income.
